MARKET ANALYSIS -August, 10, 2000

John Hall, Marketing Specialist

Grain prices continue sideways movement again this week. It appears December Corn futures have reached some resistance at the $1.90 level. November soybeans appear to see resistance at $4.50. So what is new. For those that put floors on their crop last spring using PUT options, you might capture some of those premiums if you need immediate cash. A December $2.50 PUT purchased in April for $.20 can be cashed for over $.60 cents. A November $5.75 soybean PUT options that were purchased for $.52 could be cashed in for $1.20. So much for "could have!" Wheat may be the first concern. Storage incentive opportunities may exist for corn assuming you have moved your wheat crop out. Your wheat decision may rest on corn opportunities. There appears little interest in export opportunities for wheat at this time. This slow demand coupled with movement to create storage for corn leaves little optimism for wheat.

Visit your FCS office soon to learn your opportunities. Payment limitations appear to be the rule. Be sure you understand LDP's before harvest begins. You may have some storage opportunities if you have storage available. Locally, outside storage is being considered. Do your planning now if this is a consideration.

With continued moisture in the Mid-West, record corn yields appear realistic. The crop appears to be progressing ahead of last year's development. In the mid-west soybeans also appear ahead of last year's development. Even though our local beans need some sunshine. Record crops are still insight for both corn and soy. With storage gluts insight, little basis opportunities exist at this moment.
